PHENIX, July 5, 1872.

...

As if to celebrate the Fourth with a vengeance, some Pimas tried to jump the ranch of Starrar Brothers. At one time the contention was rather hot, one party trying to force their horses into the grain, and the other party trying to save their hard earned crop; some well directed blows from clubs were given on both sides. Finally, J. Starrar, not being armed, withdrew from the melee, came to town, borrowed a pistol and went for those Indians who, in the meantime had made for home. Poor Lo had miscalculated his man. The ringleader was captured and quietly lodged in jail and three of the horses were detained without the firing of a single shot.
